

Fay E. Brown, Ph.D., an Associate Research Scientist at the Child Study Center at Yale University, serves as the Director of Child and Adolescent Development for the School Development Program in that Center. Dr. Brown has worked at the elementary, high school and college levels, teaching and counseling students. Her major focus is to help schools create and maintain developmentally appropriate conditions to ensure the holistic development of every child.

Dr. Brown has authored and co-authored journal articles about reading achievement of struggling elementary school students, and about the over-representation of African-American students in special education classes. She has also co-authored book chapters in such books as: Child by Child; Six Pathways to Healthy Development and Academic Success; and Dynamic Instructional Leadership to Support Student Learning and Development.

Dr. Brown has served as an educational consultant to individual schools, school districts, and various other groups, including parent groups and the educational task force of the United Church of Christ. She is a motivational speaker, and in that capacity, presents at local, national, and international conferences and other events. In terms of civic contributions, Dr. Brown recently served as the education chair of the Greater New Haven Branch of the NAACP.

Fay E. Brown, Ph.D., an Associate Research Scientist at the Child Study Center at Yale University, serves as the Director of Child and Adolescent Development for the School Development Program in that Center. Dr. Brown currently serves as the education chair of the Greater New Haven Branch of the NAACP.